From plutocracy to museum, Swinney's been home

By VIRGINIA BENSHEIMER

The old Swinney Homestead has held a lot of laughter and a lot of history over the years.

It has held Fort Wayne's "graceful plutocracy," the rich and elegant of the city's past, their parties and their wakes.

The homestead, which now houses the Fort Wayne-Allen County Historical Museum, will be the site for the Historical Society's membership drive kick-off event today. And it will be the subject of the "free gift" the society will give those who join.

"Graceful Plutocracy, the Swinney Family of Fort Wayne," is the title of the specially-published, soft-bound book published by the society. The work of three local historians, Patrick Boice, Margaret J. Schram-Cruze and Freda Withers, it is a compendium of all that is known about the aristocratic Swinneys and their times.

The public is invited to today's social kick-off at the Swinney Homestead, according to Gary Ernest, director of the museum. Ken Cole, a local architect, will discuss the Old City Hall and its prospects as a museum for those interested in the proposed project. He will speak at 4 p.m.

In addition, those interested in history can tour the museum and, Ernest said he hopes, join the Historical Society. Each new member will be given a copy of the Swinney book.

Dec. 20, 1977, will be the 150th anniversary of the marriage of Thomas and Lucy Swinney, who were wed in Allen County in 1827.

Out of this union sprang the entire Swinney plutocracy.

Thomas Swinney was an early settler in Fort Wayne — he came here from Piketon, Ohio, in 1822, early days for the small, struggling city built around an abandoned fort.

Tom was evidently a painter — reference is made to an eagle he painted over a newly-opened tavern, according to the Swinney book.

When he married Lucy Taber, she brought a dowry of 240 acres — Lucy apparently planted a sycamore tree to commemorate the event, and the tree has outlived them. It still stands by the homestead on the south side of the parking lot.

The Swinneys had eight children, according to the Historical Society book, and their first home was located south of the existing house, nearer the St. Marys River where Swinney Park now exists.

The present homestead was begun in 1844 and completed the next year. It is done in the federal style of architecture and, before being divided for use as a museum, had a symmetrical interior room design, a mark of the architectural style.

Swinney was involved in local politics, both in elected and appointed posts, during his lifetime, as was his whole family. An ardent Whig, he organized the city around William Henry Harrison in the election of 1840, according to the Swinney book, and promoted the Whigs locally for many years.

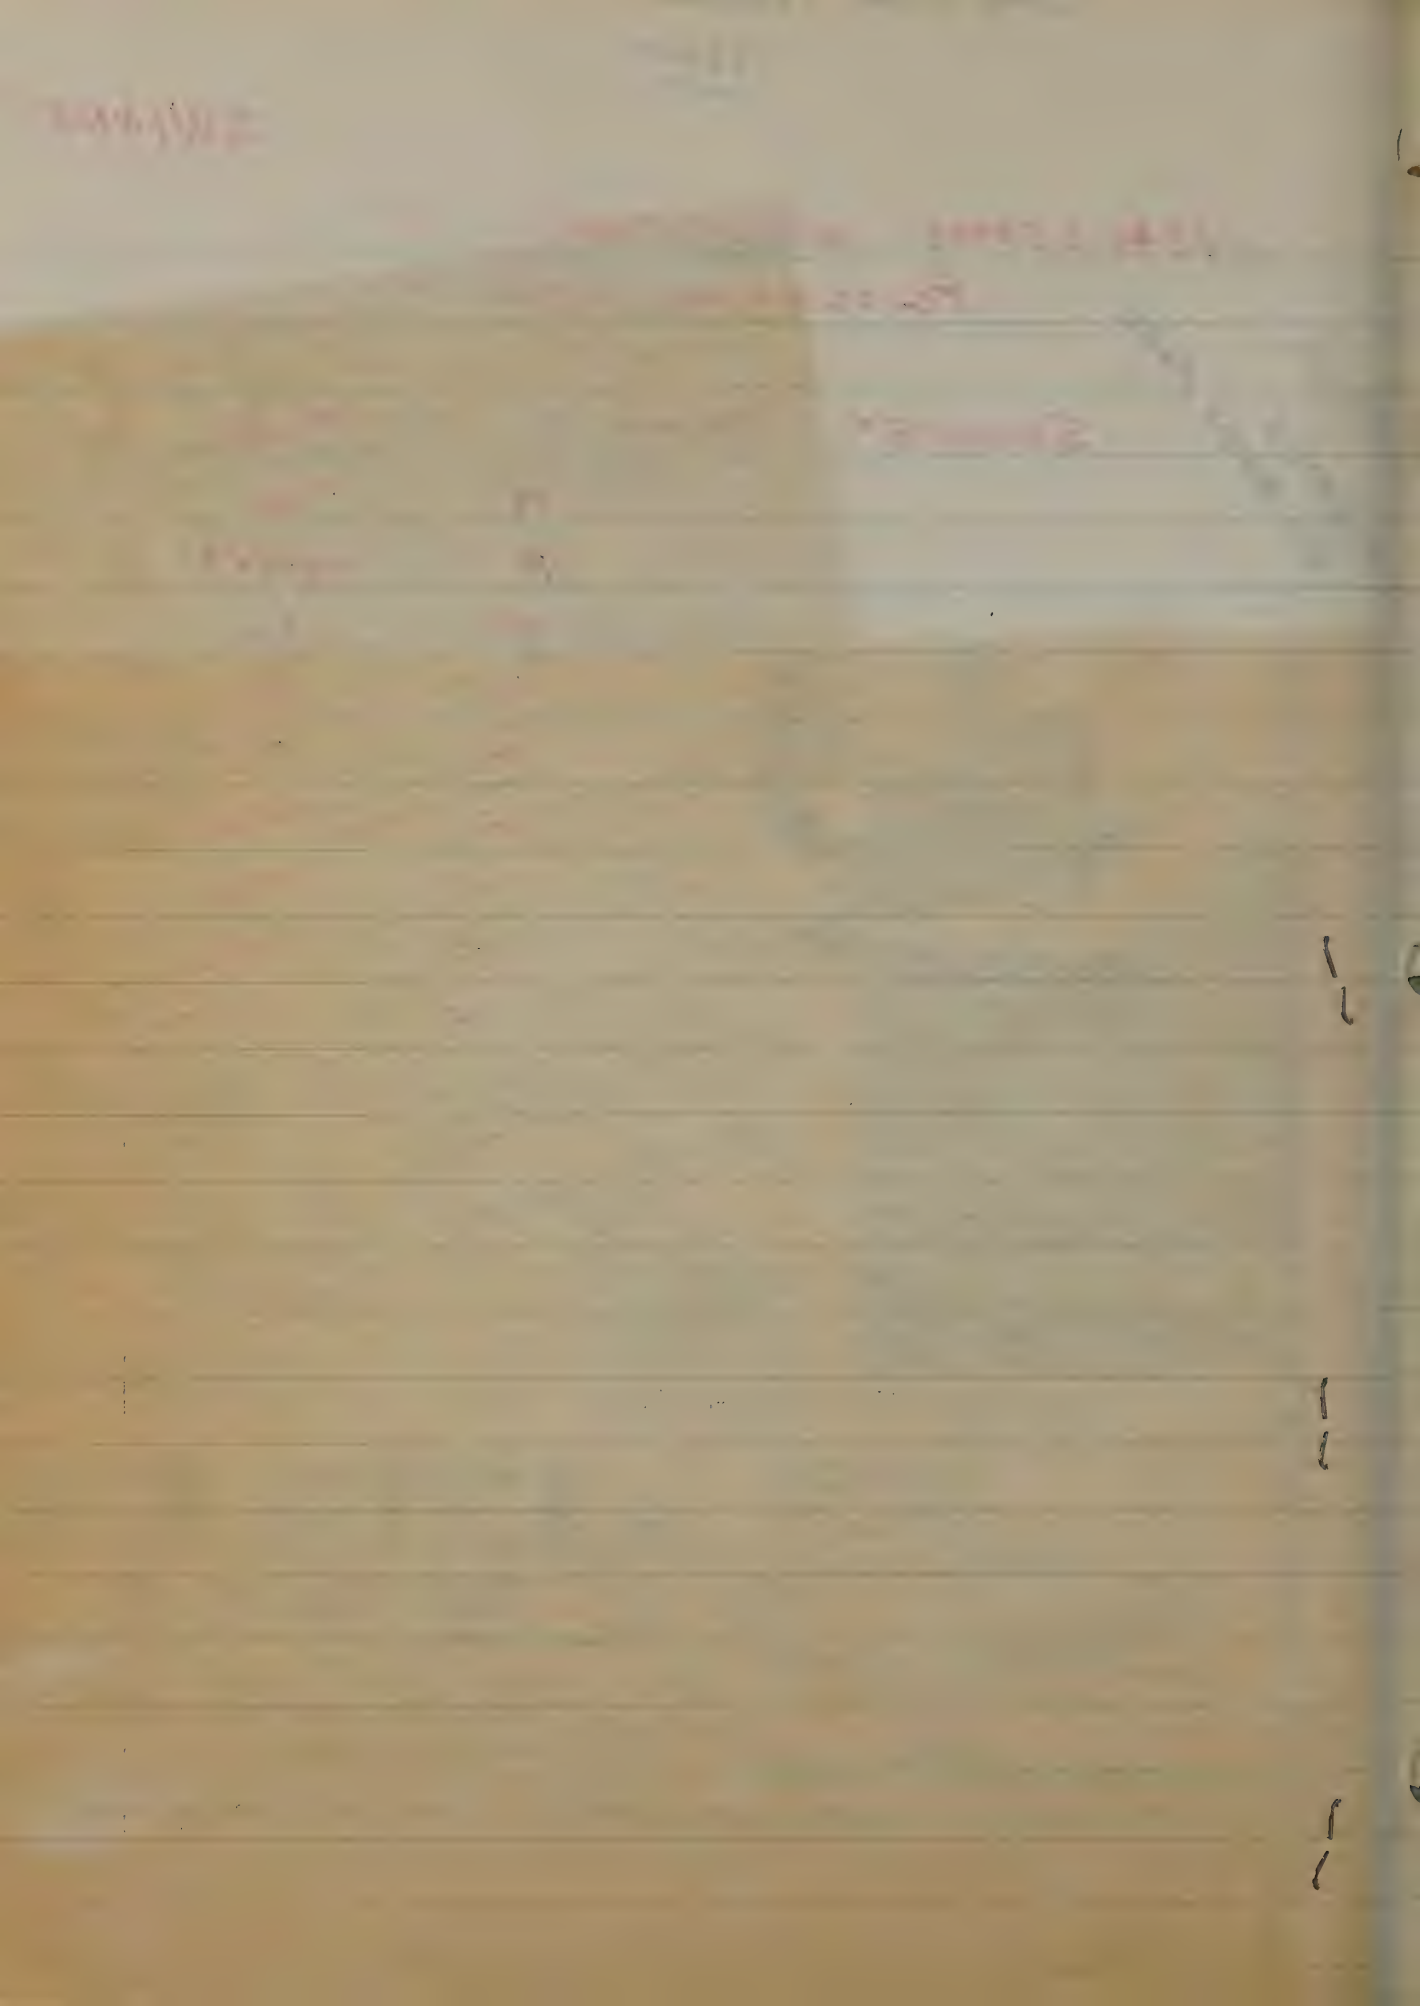

The Swinney homestead was the site of the huge gala celebration of the opening of the Wabash and Erie Canal in 1843 — After the dedication ceremonies, a tremendous parade began wending its way to the homestead. "When the crowd — reported as anywhere from 10,000 to 20,000 — reached the Swinney estate, they found a huge dinner awaiting them. After the dinner, the bands played, the speeches were given, the toasts — 24 in all — were made and received amid cheers and the firing of guns," according to the Swinney book.

The book, which continues to chronicle the lives of Swinney, his offspring and their offspring, contains reproductions of most of the pictures still in existence of the Swinney family and their homestead as it stood more than a hundred years ago.
